"This really is the natural home of the manufacturer. We have here cheap labor, magnificent climate, and superb water power. The Potomac, from Georgetown to Great Falls, ought to be used for manufacturing purposes. I do not think that plants of this character will detract from the beauties of the city as a mecca of homes. All the capitals of the Oid World, especially Berlin, have outstripped us simply because they have encouraged and fostered manufacturing interests. We have the Capital of the greatest nation on earth, and should be one of the foremost commercial cities of this country. This is a political center, it will soon be the social center, and is fast becoming the educational center of the Western Hemisphere. Why should we not be the commercial center also?"

Mechanics Will Come. William Corcoran Hill said: "It is a great thing for Washington, specially the eastern section along steel mechanics here, and the class of men, all of whom receive good wages, will be such as to benefit conditions in many ways. There is a splendid opening before the eastern part of the Distriet for substantial improvements as a result of the establishment of the plant. The other side of the Eastern branch will be benefited all the way to Benning, particularly when Minnesota avenue is opened to Benning road."

with such rapidity that whole families were turned out, many in their night clothes, to escape threatening death. Four alarms were sent in to head quarters, and the fire assumed such proportions that Chief Croker crossed the bridge to take command in person.

At the time the flames were discovered there were 103 horses on the third floor, and the drivers and stablemen displayed remarkable heroism, braving the flames and taking out alive every animal.

The flames started in the hay loft of the section of the building—which is L-shaped—occupied by the Adams Company, at 186 and 180 Adams street. Haz and other inflamable material fed the flames, which spread rapidly.
